The results of 2nd 2012 CPP YOUTH MOVEMENT FACEBOOK POLL are:

NDP – Konadu: 1,227 Votes – 7%
NPP – Akufo-Addo: 6,541 Votes – 40%
PPP – Nduom : 3773 Votes – 23%
NDC – Mahama: 4,133 Votes – 25%
CPP – Sakara: 185 Votes – 1%
PNC - Ayariga 94 votes – 0%
Joy2012 – 400 Votes – 2.5%

From the discussion below, CPP YOUTH MOVEMENT, believes that 1) No party will win 50 +1 in the first round 2) NDP and PPP may shock Ghana's political Giants, NDC and NPP and 3) there is high possibility that the Rawlings factor will lead to the weakening of the NDC at the grassroots level. This will lead to a multipolar world in Ghanaian politics where NDC, NPP, CPP, NDP and PPP are major players, as opposed to the NDC / NPP dynamic we have observed in the 4th Republic.

16,352 Votes were cast! The latest Synovate poll only had 1,858 respondents. 452,000 Facebook users saw the poll, so only about 4% of the people who saw the poll decided to vote. This means that the numbers here represent the views of the most politically inclined Facebook users. We believe these are the people that others will look to for opinions on who to vote for because they are most interested in Politics among the Facebook users. The poll was done before Konadu was disqualified by the EC.

Facebook users are 90% between the ages of 18 and 35. They are mostly in Accra.

This means that, for the people who are young, in Accra, Kumasi and a few other areas, and who also love politics, the numbers above roughly represent who they favor in the 2012 Elections.

Here at CPP Youth Movement, we love Nkrumahism. We wish that Abu Sakara would have done better because he performed so much better than NDC and NPP at the Debates!

Despite our disappointment, this election WILL BE SWEET OOOO!

Look, NDP got 7%! Now we can see why there are rumors that Mahama's people conspired to infiltrate NDP and ensure that she could not file. If she was in the race, NDC WOULD LOSE, no doubt about it!

Remember how hard Rawlings campaigned for Mills in 08? Now he is running around the country supporting NDP Parliamentary candidates. For example, in the Northern Region, typically an NDC stronghold, there are 155 candidates running for 31 seats! That is an average of 5 candidates per seat!

Aside from NPP and NDC which are fielding 31 Candidates, the parties with the highest number of contestants are PPP with 26 and NDP with 18.

The number of candidates filing corresponds positively with the poll results above. CPP Youth Movement is predicting that it is likely that both NDP and PPP will break the strangle-hold of the NDC in the Northern region.

The EC has yet to release the full list of Candidates in each region, but if the trend follows, with PPP and NDP fielding large numbers of Candidates in addition to CPP, PNC and Independent Candidates, it is likely that NDC will lose its majority in Parliament even with the addition of 45 new seats. They are likely to fall to strong CPP, Independent, NDP or PPP candidates because of the rift in NDC.

Therefore based on the results above, CPP Youth Movement believes that at the end of the First round it is even possible that NDC could be in third place. Look at the analysis below:

Konadu has 7%, yet she is out of the race.
PPP has 23%.
NPP has 40% and NDC has 25%.
CPP, PNC and JOY 2012 all have less than 5% collectively*

*We wish CPP would become more attractive but we have reason to believe the party Chairperson is more interested in winning her own seat than helping the party at large. CPP is only really visible in Jomoro and is losing popularity among the forward thinking youth, as indicated by the poll results above. It is a shame.

Now, this is where the analysis gets sweet. CPP, PPP and NDP are fielding a large number of Parliamentary candidates. But NDP does not have a flagbearer. If the NDP told its people to vote skirt and blouse and endorsed CPP or PPP's flagbearer, CPP's presidential Candidate could get 10% or PPP's Presidential numbers would jump to 30%.

We are waiting on the Parliamentary Filing results in volta. If NDP and has high numbers of Parliamentary Candidates there, NDC is practically doomed. They cannot afford to lose 1 seat in Volta and with strong challenges from NDP, PPP, NPP, NDC AND with Rawlings castigating them at every turn, they are in trouble.

Based on the poll results above, the first round could look like this at the Presidential Level :

NPP 40%
PPP 30%
NDC 25%
Other Parties: 5%

Given that no party would win 50 + 1% in the first round, the second round would either be a showdown between PPP and a coalition of friends, like NDP, CPP, NDC, against NPP, OR NPP and PPP would form a coalition government.

If you follow this analysis through we see that, surprisingly, small parties like CPP can determine the outcome of the elections. More surprisingly, at least from the inclinations of the young, educated population on Facebook, PPP could indeed end up the winner of the 2012 elections at the Presidential level. All it would take is an alliance here and there, and politics in Ghana would be forever changed.

POLITICAL ANALYSIS. IT IS SWEET OOOOO!
